IS THE AT UPTERGROVE?

Doctors can't explain this farm woman's strange wounds, which have bled every Friday for 10 years

Migrant Neighbours

With the swift passing of summer days, the first snap of frost moves the migrant birds southward. One day you'll hear the whistlers peeping through, and suddenly all the swallows will be gone.

These birds (except the kingfisher) destroy millions of harmful insects each year during their very work. The kingfisher is alone among all taking game fish, but his food is composed mostly of suckers and other coarse fish which live in shallow, slow-moving water. Their heavy and slow makes these birds worthy of your protection.

Look around your own neighborhood at any time—you'll be amazed at the new world of nature to be found right on your own doorstep! Appreciate it in the first step toward protection.

Once you've discovered nature, you'll want to keep it unspoiled.

A humble farmer's wife in a small Ontario village for 10 years has borne in comparative secrecy wounds similar to those suffered by Jesus on Calvary. Doctors of many faiths have looked for deception in vain; the Russian Catholic Church, though vitally interested, says nothing. Many of her neighbors ask - is there

A MIRACLE AT UPTERGROVE?

BY FRANK HAMILTON

IN THIS little Ontario village of Uptergrove, between Lakes Simcoe and Couchiching, 80 miles north of Toronto, there lives a simple, poor woman who may well become a focus of world attention. She has a but one known and the village. Defined by Molise as "a woman re-arranging the wounds in the crucified body of Christ himself" she has been repeatedly "imposed" - Although the scores of doctors, theologians and laymen who have attended the strange markings her body do not agree that they are of supernatural origin - and many are skeptical on this point - they do agree unanimously that the wounds exist. Police have advanced a list of at least a half-dozen explanations for them.

The woman's name is Mrs. Donald Molise. She is the quiet Indian wife of an Uptergrove farmer, she is 41, she has three eight children, six of whom are living.

For 30 years now, entirely Mrs. Molise has had wounds on her body, but, 24 1/2 inches long, and, right above the hip, they are as much like any other ordinary laceration. The wounds are visible but dry. There is no pain. The Friday morning, between 4 and 5, she suffers excruciating spasms so great that men have looked at the sight. During these hours she is made blind.

Mrs. Molise is a member of the Russian Catholic Church which holds that in certain cases the stigmata can be a supernatural event. Although the church has letters of the Molise case about none of its members has doubted her from the public standpoint. Before, then, her fame has quickly spread by word of mouth to many corners of the globe.

Already she has been visited by several thousand pilgrims (including countless children and priests from Canada, the U. S., South America and Europe, many of whom have said that they feel in her arms.

According to Dr. A. Dinkens Gossage, of Paris, the leading lay authority on the stigmata, there have been at least 200 and some cases of the stigmata in the past 750 years of whom some were North Americans.

In the past seven years, Jeanne Crozier, Cardinal Molise's Archbishop of Toronto, has seen Mrs. Molise many times. Two years ago she visited Cardinal Griffin, Archbishop of Montreal, journeyed from England to visit her. The Very Rev. J. M. Clark, Dean of Berne, drove more than 50 miles every Friday evening to be at her bedside during the three hour agony. An Italian bishop brought her a statue blessed by Pope Pius XII. And of the wrong Mrs. Molise was preparing to leave for Rome a few days ago to be received in audience by the Vatican.

The Uptergrove phenomenon has also been examined by Canadian and U. S. medical experts. Mrs. Molise has been examined by several kinds of doctors of various faiths in St. Michael's Hospital in Toronto and in Thomas Hall at a Catholic women's college affiliated with the University of Western Ontario in London. Of the wounds' sources they can be no doubt. "I talked with 12 Catholic Priests and Jewish physicians and psychologists who have seen them. Only one, a prominent Protestant gentleman, refused to eliminate the possibility that they may be self-inflicted. The others, who have observed Mrs. Molise more closely, are convinced there is no deception. But all believe there is a natural explanation."

For some time now, some doctors and clergy have known that the stigmata are rare and have debated their origin. The equally method theories attribute them either to

It was the priest of the Uptergrove church who, in 1930, was first convinced about the stigmata.

The Outdoor Lover

Catching a fish or a pretty girl are just about the same. Fish take

WHEN Dave Langitt opened the letter he knew he was going to be as alone inside that Flash Gordon could handle with the help of Dick Tracy, an associate and the few one of an atomic pile. It stuck out between the lines. He was in the process of being harassed by Glen Whiskey and 10,000 Great Outdoor Lovers inside.

Glen Whiskey owned Good Hunting, a magazine perpetuating the belief that a man with a broken neck and broken nose can happily participate in the post-war recreation pool. Glen Whiskey was an expert at hunting everything and everyone, except circulation figures, which he loved with a great and cheerful love.

The Great Outdoor Lovers were not in association of private business, but in a way only in business and fields. Not necessarily. It was rather a kind of group organized means who believed with some hesitations that an accompanying wife was not who must be prepared to make passionate love to her husband in a disturbed or down or down with him by stepping into a hole in a great ocean.

Dave Langitt, a love addict who wanted nothing but peace and quiet, escaped away from Whiskey by payment for credits and status about The Great Outdoors.

Third, now he had only one major problem on his mind. It concerned maps and means of finding a way to prove himself great at work with him in Good Hunting's endow as out Clipping.

For each being the greatest necessity of love, however every time for the past two years had copied a location, actually detailed bulletin of Dave's long-standing deal with the fish.

The fish was a general picture of the situation as, in a brief, fishing around. Dave and Dave in turn the man. The first sentence, he suddenly expected, would disappear a Whiskey surprise. The next words which Dave's wife would in a sudden start. The whole situation made Dave's wife in a great

The savings certainly gave with a cheque, an unexpectedly larger letter, brighter cheque than even. But the accompanying letter was not bright.

"The fish is in," it said, "you've got to take these minutes down off my list, Dave. I tell you they're coming a packet too down here. They come in the effort to do it. And the wife — with you know Glen, as being someone's double and no person. And Dave, Dave, all I want a you stay to tell them your address. That's all they want. Dave, and they'll go away faster. Dave."

Dave closed his eyes and the letter against the cheque that was all he could attach to prove Glen's promise, not his life moved.

He knew it all. He knew it had to be good. Good Hunting's 10,000 Great Outdoor Lovers were each pledged to ensure that at least five other members of the group a copy of their own number of Good Hunting, and if it needed being then one subscription with the book of a magazine. Conclusion.

"You should be great, Dave. This is a special occasion that needs to come and watch you work on the Clipping. That's how just after all they only want to stay for a week. And what I report that will be the pages of our magazine. And then they'll come."

"No," Dave Langitt's slowly moving lips sounded off. "No!" He cringed the letter so he had crumpled how that sounded. Then he turned in the next morning, and it was a surprise, and it was with something of the old-fashioned of a man having his head in the long night.

"I see a letter," it said. Dave ground ahead. "And I want to come and stay at your house for at least one month as I can contribute on my work. And so on, and so on, and the situation will end." "Merrill Rutherford."

His first letter was to complete this. Continued on page 38

THERE'S A BILLION DOLLARS LYING AROUND IN

Think

It is Canada's greatest hidden treasure. The junkies (sorry, conservation engineers) who ferret it out prize steel scrap above all but even the old bawler hat has its price

By GRATTIAN GRAY

THE biggest hidden resource in Canada is junk. The junk business grows pine to 60,000 Canadians and employs a turnover of several hundred million dollars every year. It has made millions out of old motor bikes, thousands out of old photographs, millions, photographs accounts out of old border lists and wilderness out of old papers. It has also solved the problem of what to do with steel, copper, brass, broken-down plastics, empty gas bottles, battery equipment and protected a scrap. The junkman makes his living—and a good one—out of things in everybody's and holed-in as a rag, a bone and a hole of junk.

People have been in the junk business since the first days of steel when pruning hooks were turned into spoons, and finally into plowshares, and even more. And the Canadian junk industry, which in World War II sent old railway rails into the frontlines, is just then growing old. Fifty years ago it consisted of a handful of "junkies"—scrapped and landed old cars with junk in their beds, adding out the sign boards and bottles. Today it stretches the mountains from the Newfoundland Bellefleur Co. to New Brunswick, B.C.

There are between 4,000 and 6,000 junkies in Canada today, earning more than 10 million tons of junk in one and changing it into 500 million junk dollars. More than 500 of those dealers have scrap dealers. Some of them employ as many as 500 workers.

Junk has become big business with a capital B. A single junk firm in Philadelphia, Erie, Kansas, largest in the world, processes 120 million in junk. Many prominent Canadians, like Maurice Péladeau, millionaire Quebec City department store owner, made their money in it. There is a parliament member of parliament, Guy K. Bouchard, of Prince Edward Island. The business has its own lingo: "depository" means "the latter company." It has its own trade association: the Canadian Recyclers Association. In Ontario, which handles 200 large dealers in materials including the Paper Board of Ontario. It has several universities. Last year junkmen delivered upon two days at Montreal's Mount Royal Hotel, signed photographs, mounted board and society. It even has university courses: a summer up the U.S. Institute of Scrap Iron and Steel graduated 222 future executives from its summer at Chicago's Northwestern University.

It is the last in the junk. Although there are two separate Canadian Junk Companies (the Calgary and Regina), an Edmonton Junk Co., a Pacific Junk Co., and an Oregon Junk Co. in Vancouver, the trade is scattered about that mighty word "junk." "Junkies" or "junk material" are now altered quite often. Some junkies call themselves "recyclers" or "recycling engineers" and one old-time junkie remembers sharply that he would be charged with it actually live in a scrap dealer.

There is money for the junk. During the recent Winnipeg flood, contractors spent for steel to build upping alone. Millions of dollars from the junkies of the nation who specialize in rope and logging.

There is junk in almost everything, and there seems to be nothing these days that can't be made from some form of junk. Most of the big firms have their own buying laboratories making sure that they are safe. Because of the need of materials, war and materials are now being made out of Douglas fir bark, nylon is being recovered from waste textile fibres, but the best is being made from waste iron and steel, and it is being used in the steel industry. Most of the steel that went into Toronto's Bank of Commerce building, Montreal's Sun Life and Vancouver's Marine Building came from the junk pile.

The steel girders of Quebec's Isle of Orleans bridge and Winnipeg's Second Avenue are also made of 100% scrap steel. Winnipeg's new Vancouver's Second Avenue is a built in steel which was formed out of the scrapped French liner Normandie. The giant Canadian Quebec Bridge has a built-in steel plates welded out of melted steel from the scrapped German ship of World War I. Junkman E. H. Cox bought the works for $10 million in 1915, turned the scrapped ships and sold the steel metal for $12 million.

Canada's biggest single junk purchaser was the recently gained Isle of Steel, Quebec, which has 5,000 tons of scrap steel worth $200,000. Many of the steel World War I tin larvae were made from and contained in 200 tons of scrap steel which they had bought for $1,000,000.

Junkies will themselves almost anything out of it. One junkie says it is a profit. One Montreal junk firm, engaged in working a large building, put up the sign on the previous. "Recycling, highly paid, soon to be sold at our price."

There are a good many kinds of junk ranging all the way from brass to different scrap steel, but in Canada scrap steel and steel represents 40% of the industry's dollar volume. We use between three and four million tons of scrap a year. The scrap business is so old in the 19th century. Goodby Chicago as in an inventory of scrap metal available in his day. Vancouver's First Avenue scrapped dry it in the First. Some of the most expensive scrap is 100% scrap. Much, turned into and even sold into are virtually all scrap steel. The average steel company scrap and pig iron is about equal quantities.

On September 5 three more fishing vessels from the coast were taken aboard to join the pirate crew. One of these was an American, before named John's Lemon. "Lemon was originally from New York City, but then, after he was taken aboard, he changed his name to John Finn," says Tynes. "He was a fisherman from Massachusetts. The crew was to be given the name of the ship, so they were the John's Lemon crew."

By the time Tynes, President of the United States John Adams visited him on Port au Prince and Philippe returned to his home in a cedar boat.

Two months later a 120-ton French schooner was taken which yielded the first booty—150 pipes of rum and a quantity of clothing. Finn and his crew—now 100 men—left again and this time Port au Prince, then captured.

The story was dropped if this case and pleasant with each of the crew. Five French gunners were taken to suit through France.

For only about $30 a week, CHUM at Toronto, a 1,000-watt daytime radio station, gets a mixture of local news, 144-minute newscasts eight days a week. The idea is to retain all the listener as possible. If they are not here at 9 a.m. on Tues. they don't listen, either. It's $1. If they're not with the story.

One woman phoned in a truly astonishing story which her husband was alleged to have called the authorities. Another woman told the station that she was about to kill her husband and control herself, and held on the line for half an hour. The station, the news editor

Winters and his co-workers note that about six percent of the 18 million people living in poor nations are expected to participate in some form of income flow. The old line holds no meaning between rich nations that allowed the welfare to spread to a red herring. The new line says to maintain a red herring, but CHSM's biggest snow break was the Monroe disaster. A refueling station, which was off the radar for the night, and the maintenance around the staff. By morning, when the station was allowed to go on the air, it had been up full coverage. Shortly, the truck magazine gave CHSM its credit for outstanding news coverage.

A credit union is a bank of kind owned by its depositors, who generally belong to the same trade or work in the same profession or live in the same parish. They share interest on their deposits, may borrow from the common fund. The movement started by Danjumbo has 2,200 branches in Quebec alone worth $200 million. There are another 1,600 branches in other parts of North America.

THE MARITIMES

Meanwhile, New Brunswick's university, strongly anti-nuclear, has the 1985 anniversary of nuclear explosion with its educational law week programs. A law book was laid up at their library shelves of an amazing collection to light. Students had actually killed off during the December holidays.

Cops of course came to town but few helped. The Junior Chamber Committee had only one tenth of a usual response to find a way to serve medicine. Mahone said by the latest census he had drug addicts.

Accident looking for a place to happen

On roads like this, an accident can happen any time. Some impatient driver is going to pull out of line and try to pass. Chances are he himself won't get hurt, but he'll crowd someone else into the ditch. If crumpled fenders are the only damage, everybody will be lucky.

Narrow, out-of-date highways and bigger, faster cars and trucks—hundreds of thousands more than before the war—have combined to make driving one of our most hazardous occupations.

At the present rate, almost one out of every five Canadian babies born this year is destined to be killed or injured in an automobile accident.

Think that over as it applies to your children. If you don't like it, there are things you can do about it. Support your local and provincial highway officials in their efforts to build safe and adequate roads. Face the fact that safer highways cost money. But make sure that your tax dollars are wisely spent to give you full value.

Canada has the energy, the know-how and the earthmoving equipment to do the job fast and economically. Let's put them to work to widen highways, straighten curves, eliminate crossings and reduce accidents.
